

Excerpt from Memoirs of the International Congress of Anthropology
The International Congress of Anthropology formed one of the series of Congresses held at Chicago, in the year 1893, under the auspices of the Worlds Congress Auxiliary of the Worlds Columbian Exposition. To give it a fully representative character, however, it was thought advisable to enlist in the work of the Congress the cooperation of the leading scientific societies of the United States, interested in the study of Anthropology. With this object, in addition to the local Committee of Organization, an Executive Committee was appointed, the members of which represented, not only the Congress Auxiliary, but also the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Folk-lore Society, the Anthropological Society of Washington, the Womens Anthropological Society, and the United States Army Medical Museum. The first meeting of the Congress of Anthropology, under the presidency of Dr. Daniel G. Brinton, was held August 28th, 1893, at the Memorial Art Institute, Chicago, after addresses of welcome had been made by the Honorable Charles G Bonney, the President of the Congress Auxiliary, and others. The subsequent meetings of the Congress, which continued until September 2nd, 1893, were held on the grounds of the Worlds Columbian Exposition, so as to be within reach of the Anthropological and Ethnological collections in the Anthropological Building, under the charge of Professor F. W. Putnam, Chief of the Department of Ethnology, and of the illustrations of American Ethnology in the Government Building, besides the numerous detached collections of objects which afforded so abundant a supply of material for Anthropological study at the Exposition.
