In presence of some chosen witness, king Hilpenk took his wifes hand in his own right hand, and with the left threw a piece of straw over her, and pronounced with a loud voice the names of five towns, which were in future to be the queens property. The act of this perpetual and irrevocable donation was drawn up in the Latin language; it has not been preserved to us, but we can easily imagine the tenour of it, from the usual formulas and style used in all memorials of the Merovingian epoch: Since God has commanded that a man shall leave father and mother to cleave to his wife, that they shall be as one flesh, and that no one shall put asunder those whom the Lord has joined together, I, Hilperik, king of the Franks, an illustrious man, do gvt to-day from tenderness of affection, under the names of dowry and morgane-gliilia, the towns of Bordeaux, Cahors, Limoges, Bearn, and Bigorre, with their territories and population, unto thee, Galeswintha. my well-beloved wife, whom I have wedded according to the Salic law, by the sou and the denier. It is my will that, from this day forth, thou shouldst hold and possess them to perpetuity; and I give, transfer, and confer them by this present act, as I have already done by the piece of straw and the handelangi The first months of the new queens marriage were at least quiet, if not happy; patient and gentle, she bore with resignation all the savage brtlsquerie of her husbands character. Besides, for some time, Hilperik felt a sincere affection for her; he first loved her from vanity, and r...
